Preserve and share your senior thesis in Academic Commons

As a Barnard student, you are unique. Unlike students at other schools, you’re required to complete a significant research project: your senior thesis. It sets you apart from your professional and academic peers. Why not show it off? You can save and share it using Academic Commons, the institution’s online repository.

Academic Commons provides a permanent URL for your thesis. Here’s why that matters:

• Your thesis will receive its own distinct permanent URL and robust metadata page. A distinctive presentation of your crowning scholarly achievement.
• Your work will have readers beyond your thesis advisers and greater potential to impact future research.
• Need a solid writing sample? Add your thesis’ link to your CV and graduate school applications.
• The one-stop link allows you to share your thesis on other sites and people online via new media tools (e.g., Twitter).

If you answered “yes” to any of these questions, then Academic Commons is the right place for your senior thesis.

Planning to attend grad school?

Need a polished writing sample for your job applications?

Considering a career in academia?

Want to share your scholarly works with family and friends (via Twitter and Facebook)?

For more information

If you have questions about repository services, or if you would like to get started depositing your materials, we are eager to talk to you about your needs.

Contact Robert Hilliker, Digital Repository Manager, at:
rhilliker@columbia.edu

Links:

Academic Commons: http://academiccommons.columbia.edu
Repository blog and FAQ: http://cdrs.columbia.edu/academiccommons
Self-deposit Form: http://cdrs.columbia.edu/cdrsmain/?page_id=1153